flight and that it received a report upon completion of each flight, certifying that there had been no activities contrary to the provisions of resolutions 661 (1990) and 670 (1990), and the Permanent Representative of the Sudan had been so informed (S/AC.25/1992/NOTE/525). He also drew attention to the text of the first such report (S/AC.25/1992/COMM.1297), and to a further communication from the Sudan notifying the Committee of two more flights (S/AC.25/1992/COMM.1280/Add.1); the latter had come after the flight had taken place. Since the Committee's requirement was for the Sudan to give advance notice of each flight, he suggested that he be authorized to contact the Permanent Representative of the Sudan to remind him of that fact. It was so decided.] though it had invaded a neighbouring country and started a war, Iraq was still a sovereign State. There was no resolution calling for it to be treated like a colony, yet the Committee was none the less taking the attitude of a colonial Power. Members often asked why so much of a given item should be exported to Iraq. The answer to that was clear: Iraq was not being allowed to produce what it needed. It was obvious that lipstick was not an essential civilian need, but what was more natural than for a country devastated by war to wish to return to normality? He called on the Committee to show the greatest possible generosity consistent with the Committee on the substance of such terms, as "basic humanitarian needs", "essential civilian needs" used in resolutions 661 (1990) and 687 (1991). Certainly the Committee should be as generous as possible in interpreting those terms; he, however, was not in a position to mandate such generosity, but could only reflect the views of the Committee, which often diverged. When he saw a chance to embody those views in a consensus decision, he would do so, and would attempt to achieve the best possible result through bilateral consultations and by whatever other means seemed promising. He noted further that when conveying the Committee's views to the principals in the requests submitted, he did so even-handedly, as he would do in the current matter. He agreed with the representative of Ecuador that the greatest seriousness was called for on the part of members, and was sure it would be forthcoming.]

TXT[It was the Committee's practice to deal only with States. The Committee had agreed that where persons or entities other than States wished to raise matters before the Committee, they could do so only by submission through the respective State representative. The formulations used by the secretariat in responding to requests depended on whether the focus was on the originating country or the country in which the entity in question operated.]
